A BUSY MAN.

President Roosevelt's Daily Routine of Business.

The President burns a good deal of midnight oil. Most men would be exhausted by his ordinary daily duties. He takes his breakfast at 8 in the morning; he then sits down to his mail, and by 10 o'clock is ready to receive the members of the Senate and House and other visitors who may occupy his time until half-past 1, the luncheon hour. Scarcely a day passes without guests at luncheon. It is the most convenient and favorable time for discussing important topics with the people from outside the city, and during the present winter he has talked railway rates and rebates at his lunch table with nearly every railway president in the country. On cabinet days some member of his official family is usually invited to remain to talk over matters of immediate importance that may have been left undecided. After luncheon, at 3 o'clock or thereabouts, the President returns to his office to sign the letters he dictated in the morning; to give instructions concerning matters of business that have come up during the day; to confer with members of Congress about legislation; to meet strangers whom he did not have time to receive in the morning, and to talk over matters with chiefs of bureaus and other officials.

At 4 o'clock, or as soon after as practicable, he lays down his pen and escapes. If it is a pleasant day he goes into the country for a drive, a horseback ride or a walk; and these walking expeditions are the terror of the members of his cabinet and others whom he sometimes invites to accompany him. Secretary Morton, Secretary Metcalf and Attorney General Moody can give expert testimony concerning the President's pedestrian strenuousness. If it is rainy he gets his exercise indoors, in the gymnasium which he has fitted up for that purpose—fencing, boxing, wrestling and other work of that kind—which he enjoys and in which he excels. When his exercise is finished he bathes, has a shave and dresses. While he is waiting for the hour half-past 7—at which the family dinner is served, he reads the newspapers and letters that have come in the late mail, romps with his children and chats with his family and guests. Seldom a day passes but that there are at least one, and usually three or four, friends enjoying the home-like hospitality at the White House. Very seldom does the Roosevelt family sit down to dinner alone. State dinners occur every fortnight, and from two to six guests are invited every evening.

Five or six nights in the week, at 9 o'clock, Mr. Latta, the President's stenographer, appears, when the President excuses himself, retires to his study and spends the next three hours dictating speeches, messages to Congress, memoranda to his cabinet and other officials, and letters of importance which cannot be answered off hand. He writes a good many letters of that character.

Within the last three or four weeks he has discussed the rebate question at great length, in writing, with several railway men, who have voluntarily or at his request sent him their views of the matter. Some of his replies to their letters have been very long—long enough to fill two or three columns in a newspaper. He has also written several communications of length on the negro problem. A friend in Boston wrote him on that subject not long ago, giving him what was considered good advice. The communication did not call for an answer, and none was expected, but the President devoted at least two hours of his precious time in dictating an elaborate reply.

President Roosevelt dictates very easily. Usually the transcript of the stenographer's notes require very little revision. When he is preparing a speech he dictates it just as he would from the platform. The next day Mr. Latta hands him a typewritten copy, which is revised and sent back for a clean copy to be made. If it is a speech of importance, it is sent to the printing office, put in type and printed slips are furnished the press associations to send to the newspapers.

INSURRECTION CONTINUES.

Danger to American Residents in the Philippines.

The insurrection in the Philippines is by no means over. The fight in which Dr. O'Neill was killed did not take place in any isolated spot on some semi-savage island, but in the suburbs of the capital of the Philippine Islands, within a dozen miles of Manila.

The large number of women and children on the transport Thomas, which passed through Honolulu last week for San Francisco, is accounted for by an Army order issued recently and according to which all army ladies and children, residing in the islands and whose husbands and fathers have more than one year's service—to serve on active duty should immediately return to the United States. What caused this order to be issued is uncertain, but the general opinion on the Thomas is that the restless condition of the pacified Filipinos forebodes danger. A number of engagements have taken place recently on the Islands of Luzon and Cebu and the haste with which troops are being sent there by the Logan and other transports, which are to follow would seem to indicate that the Army Department is fully acquainted with the ominous conditions at present prevailing in the Eastern possessions of Uncle Sam.

Merits of Jiu Jitsu.

Under instructions from the President a joint board of army and navy officers are considering the advantages and merits of the Japanese systems of Jiu Jitsu and Jiu Do, with a view to their introduction into the course of physical training at the two military academies. It is expected that the board will be in session several weeks in the consideration of the matters referred to it, and in the preparation of its report to the President.

In view of their official consideration of the subject, the members of the board feel that they are precluded from discussing the matter for publication at this time. Although it is understood that several, if not all of the members, favor a course of instruction in Japanese methods, it was impossible to induce any of them to commit themselves on the subject today. This was especially the case with regard to the demonstration of Jiu Jitsu given by two expert Japanese wrestlers at the West Point Academy Monday. A feature of that demonstration was that both the Japanese wrestlers were overcome by athletes of the academy. Cadet Woodbury gained a fall over one of the Japanese, although the latter outweighed him, and Cadet Tipton, center rush of the academy football team, was equally successful with Professor Lokoi, the principal Japanese instructor. In the absence of details regarding these contests the local enthusiasts of the Jiu Jitsu game do not feel like accepting it as a final. As one of them put it, even should a trained American wrestler be able to overcome a Jiu Jitsu expert, that in itself would not prove that a knowledge of the Japanese science of wrestling would not be of great benefit to the young men at the Military and Naval academies. That conclusion was based on the theory that fighting men should be thoroughly equipped in all modern and approved methods of offense and defense.

A London judge learned the other day that policemen with a black eye "felt a delicacy" about doing day duty, and, until the eye got well, always did night duty.

Whooping Cough in Jamaica.

During the epidemic of whooping cough which was prevalent in Jamaica, Chamberlain's Cough Remedy was freely used. Mr. J. Riley Bennett, Chemist at Brown's Town, Jamaica, says of it: "I cannot speak too highly for this remedy. It has never failed in a case where I have recommended it and grateful mothers are daily thanking me for advising them to use it." For sale by Hilo Drug Co.
